Wheat powdery

mildew (WPM) is an economically important disease of wheat caused by the fungus Blumeria graminis f. sp. tritici. Races of this fungus have been described which are virulent on different wheat cultivars (named Pt3, Pt4 and Pt5, respectively). To detect genes involved in the resistance to WPM and to study the role of the WPM resistance gene Kr in wheat powdery mildew resistance, we have selected mutants with white or white-greenish powdery mildew leaves from the resistant cultivar Morocco and from a resistant F(2) progeny of a cross between Morocco and the susceptible cultivar Zulu. Bulked segregant analysis was used to identify mutants which are resistant to WPM. The sequences of the rrf1 (resistant to rust factor 1) gene responsible for the specific resistance to the rust fungus were used as probes. This analysis showed that the powdery mildew resistant mutation is recessive and maps between two markers: BM5248 and BM101 in chromosome 5D. Two regions on chromosome 5D were identified by intra-molecular inversion polymorphisms: one between the markers MYB33 and MYB34 and a second between the markers MYB127 and MYB52. In the recombinant inbred line population derived from the crosses between Morocco and the resistant cultivars Zulu, Morocco has an incomplete dominant allele at the powdery mildew resistance locus and confers resistance on the cultivar Morocco but susceptibility on Zulu. The rpt1 resistance gene previously described on chromosome 2DL and mapped between the markers Xwmc589 and Xwmc349 is not involved in powdery mildew resistance in Morocco. Touchscreen devices such as smartphones have become increasingly popular. The popularity of touchscreen devices is due in large part to their convenience and ease of use. The intuitive and convenient user interfaces for
